Unique Stakeholders
Shaping A Unique Future!

The UDC Alumni Story

The great thing about the University of the District of Columbia is that this institution is not content to rest on its laurels. While we extol our past achievements, we’re planning strategically for an even greater future—a future that will offer continued excellence in higher education to many, many generations to come. We, therefore, need each and every one of you to be a part of what lies ahead, so contact the Office of Alumni Relations at (202) 274-5206 and to find out how you can do just that. The Office will also tell you about the University of the District of Columbia National Alumni Society (UDCNAS), the University’s only official alumni organization and how easy it is to become a member. (Go to UDC’s web site—www.udc.edu—and click on “Alumni.”)

Vow today to be a part of the good things to come at UDC!

PREDECESSOR SCHOOLS—

A Rich History

Alumni of the University of the District of Columbia and its predecessor schools—Miner Normal School, Miner Teachers College, Wilson Normal School, Wilson Teachers College, the District of Columbia Teachers College, Federal City College, and the Antioch School of Law—can bask in the knowledge that their individual, diverse and multi-layered histories created the foundation of what is today a global institution of higher learning whose students now represent the nation's capital, almost every state, and close to 100 countries.

What a distinction! And what potential for those who have gone before to make sure that those who follow have what they had: First-rate academic training that paved the way for success for them in local, national, and international settings. So you see, we want the University’s alumni to continue the tradition by assuming their rightful roles as stakeholders in the University’s future. But an idea remains an idea until there is a plan of action.

Connecting & Building

Right now, the plan of the University, the Office of the Vice President for University Relations and Communications and specifically its Office of Alumni Relations is to get YOU involved in alumni and University affairs. Programs and activities are implemented to promote your alma mater’s ideals and span the spectrum of social, educational, and cultural activities. When you take part in annual events such as Alumni Class Reunions, homecoming receptions, Founders' Day, and student-alumni networking seminars and workshops, you are making it known that you know how to give back to the University and that you want to model for “pre-alumni”—our students—what their future roles should be. But there's more!

The University's growth and development depends greatly on its stakeholders and that's why the role of alumni can and must evolve. With that premise, the Office of Alumni Relations is designing some new programs and committees to ensure that all segments of our wide alumni body are represented.

Blueprint for Alumni Action

Now is the time for you to get in on the ground floor as the Office of Alumni Relations launches the following committees: Alumni News and Publicity, Special Events, Career and Student Networking, and Civic and Community Affairs. We're looking for alumni who would like to chair these committees and programs, and who are eager to bring their fresh ideas to other alumni, the University, and its students. Could that be YOU?
