Nikki Giovanni’s Delayed Visit to University of the District of Columbia
Set for April 23, 2007

Washington, D.C. - The University of the District of Columbia is pleased to bring to the Van Ness Campus Main Auditorium (Building 46 East) the world renowned poet, writer and educator Ms. Nikki Giovanni. Ms. Giovanni’s 7:00 p.m. lecture, originally scheduled for February 14, 2007, has been rescheduled to Monday, April 23 at 7:00 p.m. The program, free and open to the public, is part of the University’s Literature-Live Reading Series, which promotes the culture of reading and writing across the curriculum and the academic community. Doors open at 6:00 p.m.

Ms. Giovanni has written more than a dozen books, received nineteen honorary doctorates, and remains a sought-after distinguished voice on civil rights and equality.
“Nikki Giovanni educates and inspires, while raising consciousness on the issues that matter most,” says the University’s Writer-in-Residence Marita Golden. “We look forward to her presentation continuing to expand the audience for literature on the campus. Nikki is a very bright star in the literary firmament and she will make Black History Month especially meaningful on campus because of her work as an artist and an activist.”

Over the past thirty years, Ms Giovanni’s outspokenness, in her writing and in lectures, has brought the eyes of the world upon her. One of the most widely-read American poets, she prides herself on being "a Black American, a daughter, a mother, a professor of English." Giovanni remains as determined and committed as ever to the fight for civil rights and equality. Always insisting on presenting the truth as she sees it, she has maintained a prominent place as a strong voice of the Black community. Her focus is on the individual, specifically, on the power one has to make a difference in oneself, and thus, in the lives of others.

This celebrative event - free and open to the public - will culminate in a raffle of several of Ms. Giovanni’s books, a reception, and book sale/signing sponsored by Karibu Books.
