Invest in your success............

For over 40 years, the School of Business and Public Administration (SBPA) has been educating the next generation of business leaders. We continue to prepare students for successful careers in the public or private sector while strengthening their commitment to community service and making their world a better place. Small classes, affordable tuition, rigorous academics, and experiential learning help our students acquire the innovative thinking and ethical training they need to make their mark in the new breed of for-profit, nonprofit, and social enterprises.

“UDC has been a platform for my dreams! Because of its affordability, I was offered the rare opportunity to attain a business degree. Not only was obtaining my degree challenging, but also the SBPA has prepared me, from a global perspective, to meet any demands and challenges of the business world.”
- Grace Mulenga, Class of 2011

“Before coming to the SBPA, I knew nothing about research, proposal writing, grant monitoring, and the importance of public policy. I am forever a proud Firebird!”
- Keshia Kirkland, Class of 2011

“In today’s economic climate we’re seeing small businesses and corporations use innovative business practices and ideas to create new jobs and improve our economy. At UDC’s SBPA, we’re learning first hand from business leaders how to create, evaluate and execute those concepts and practices to become entrepreneurs and future business leaders.”
- James Brooks, Class of 2012
